"Cattelan may be closer at heart to the first refusal of labor in twentieth-century art history: the period in which Marcel Duchamp claimed he had stopped being an artist to become just a respiration, although he devoted himself to a spectrum of apparently marginal activities, which as a whole may be even more complex, inspiring, an influential than his strictly artistic oeuvre."

Massimiliano Gioni, Parkett no. 100/101, 2017.
