The large centre piece 'Birth of Beauty' ('Geburt der Schönheit') was realised according to the drawing design by Paul Scheurich, from 1939. The production books list a total of 15 objects whose whereabouts were unknown for a long time. 13 of these pieces make up the centre piece presented here. Its theme reflects Scheurich's interpretation of the "Venus Anadyomene", as he took it from Hesiod's Theogony. In this, the goddess Venus is born from the foam of the sea and is paid homage to by Tritons and Nereids through the gift of pearls and precious items from the sea. Scheurich interprets the pure white material of the porcelain body as the birth material of beauty - here it is like the sea and forms the divine body.

Scheurich also based the formal language of his centre piece on the painting "Die Geburt der Venus" by Bouguerau:

The naked, athletic goddess wears long, waving hair and is accompanied by small chubby-cheeked putti riding on dolphins and shells; in her wake are large hippocampi carrying the athletic, slender athletic Tritons and Nereids. They pay homage to beauty through the gift of pearls and precious items.
